(“Ah-May-may”) (“u-men-a”)

In 130 years of existence, the Harvard Law Review had never elected an African American woman as president. ImeIme Umana is a Nigerian-American. She is the 131st president, and first black female president, of the Harvard Law Review.

In 1990, former President Barack Obama, was the first African American man to be elected as president of the Harvard Law Review.

You also have the potential to be the next Harvard Law Review President. If ImeIme Umana can do it, so can you.
