We are reaching out to let you know that your child is eligible for the Connected Literacy Project's Tutoring Program this fall. The State of Tennessee has partnered with Methodist Le Bonheur Healthcare, Shelby County Schools and BookNook Learning to provide families remote literacy tutoring to help improve students' reading and comprehension skills.

This 12 week program is free to families and will be offered three times a week to eligible students in grades 1 through 3, starting December 2021.

Here's what you need to know:

BookNook is a national education technology company focused on helping students across the country achieve success in the classroom through literacy. BookNook works closely with school districts nationally to provide free tutoring services to students and families. To learn more about BookNook, please click here.

It's Virtual: Your child will use the BookNook application to complete small group tutoring sessions where they will read books and engage in a variety of online literacy activities

It's Collaborative: Your child will be assigned a dedicated tutor to work with in each session. All BookNook tutors have completed a background check and have online teaching experience.

It Works: Thousands of students in school districts across the country have found great success in this program. The average student who uses BookNook sees a 2.4x increase in reading growth. Over 74% of parents have given this program an excellent rating as they've seen their child's reading comprehension, confidence, ability, and interest significantly increase.
