

Using a First-Next Schedule

A first-next schedule can be used to support difficult transitions as it gives clear expectations and supports a student with task completion. It teaches a student what is happening now and what will happen next, which eliminates distractions and allows the student to focus on the flow of the activity. It can also support a student's attempts to avoid a particular task or activity, helping him/her to understand the order in which we complete the day.

